Loose Dogs at Rides

At the MnDRA annual meeting in March there was a discussion during the meeting about unleashed dogs at rides. Most rides in Minnesota, and UMECRA are held on public land that has leash rules. Many ride flyers state that, "All dogs must be leashed." At the MnDRA meeting there was a discussion on what the MnDRA organization can do about those riders who come to rides and ignore campground, park or private land rules about keeping their beloved pets leashed. The discussion was wide ranging, with many good ideas, and there was a protocol discussed that Minnesota ride managers could adopt if they wanted to, with the possibility of disqualification from your ride that weekend, if your dog was not leashed after being warned twice.

MnDRA I, the ride I manage, is the first ride of the season in Minnesota, so I decided to try it out. I passed the suggested policy by the UMECRA board - as it's an additional penalty - not in the rules - the could have been protested - and I wanted to know how they felt. The board's response was, "Yeah, give it a go. Try it, we'll back you on it. And let us know how it goes." So tried the All Dogs Must be Leashed at All Times, widely publicizing the fact that the leash rules for the state forest campground will be enforced, and that if you don't comply there is a warning process, possible fine and a possible DQ. There was a lively discussion on Facebook. I posted the policy in the MnDRA newsletter and put up signs in ridecamp. My ride was held, no warnings or penalties were dispensed. And I had MANY positive comments from riders and volunteers about the policy. There were fewer dogs under foot, no one complaining about their hay or other crew area supplies being peed on, fewer folks calling for their dogs to, "Come, come here right now." Some Minnesota ride managers said they were also going to use the All Dogs Must be Leashed at All Times policy as well. And several riders said we should make this an UMECRA rule, not just a rule some rides do and others do not. One rider said they wished all rides had the policy, and this was two months later, after attending rides were the request for leashed dogs is being ignored. One rider asked that if other rides do use the policy that they know about it in advance, and not just when they show up at the ride and find out when they get there that there is a penalty for unleashed dogs.

I know an early Wisconsin ride also used a similar policy.

At this time, I am not advocating for a UMECRA wide leashed dogs rule. I do want to let those folks who bring their dogs to rides that they are welcome at most rides , but to please, please leash your dog at all times. There are a multitude of reasons for this – ranging from respect and courtesy, to safety and liability, and even potential loss of use of campgrounds and riding areas. And judging from comments at MnDRA I – your fellow riders, volunteers and ride staff truly appreciate it when you contain your pet on a leash or tie.

MnDRA I's Dog leash policy:

First time pet seen or reported unleashed: verbal warning. Second time: Fine of $25 collected by MnDRA (or ride manager) and paid to a local horse rescue. Third time: Disqualification from ride(s).

Thanks in advance for leashing your pet, Theresa Meyer - UMECRA President

Update on Dr Beecher....

To all of you who know Dr. Beecher, his family has provided an update on his condition. Last week he began the first of three surgeries to recieve a brain implant that is supposed to offer significant relief from his Parkinson's disease symptoms. The process is call Deep Brain Stimulation (DBS). After the first surgery there were complications and he did not recover as well as expected. He has been moved back to the ManorCare Rehabilitation Center in Dubuque for continued recovery. The surgeries were supposed to be done one week apart but at this time the second surgery is on hold. Please keep Dr. Beecher and his famliy in your thoughts and prayers at this very difficult time. At this time visitors are not recommended but I am sure cards and notes from his endurance family would be much appreciated. The address is ManorCare, 901 West 3rd St., Dubuque, IA 52001-6608

"Endless Valley Ride a Success"

Thank you so very much to all that attended the "Endless Valley Ride." I left my co-manager Roberta Harms to run the ride with the help of everyone there when my leg broke. Once again you ALL made me proud to be a member of the distance organization. Our group is the best! Everyone stepped up willingly to ensure the ride would take place. The ride went smoothly and everything I had hauled to Spring Green, WI from Lodi was returned to my home, trails unmarked, points calculated. God Bless you all and I will personally thank you when I am up and RUNNING!

Love you all, Linda Jacobson

Turnout Time's Impact on Horses' Grass Consumption Rate

By Kristen M. Janicki, MS, PAS JUL 14, 2013 www.thehorse.com

Researchers found that reduced time on pasture increases consumption rate and decreases fecal pH in horses.

Many a horse or pony owner have restricted their overweight equid's turnout time in an effort to help him shed pounds. And while researchers know weight loss helps improve horses' overall health, until now they haven't known exactly what impact restricted grazing has on the equine gastrointestinal health or calorie intake. A group of North Carolina State University (NCSU) researchers recently set out to determine if restricted pasture access affected horses' intake rate, energy intake, and hindgut fermentation.

The research team, led by Paul D. Siciliano, PhD, associate professor in the NCSU Department of Animal Science, separated eight mature idle geldings into four groups and allowed each group pasture access for either 3, 6, 9, or 24 hours for seven days. After seven days, the team reassigned the groups to a different turnout treatment on an ungrazed pasture. By the end of the four-period study, each horse had been subjected to each pasture treatment. When not on pasture, the horses stayed in drylot pens with access to water and salt; horses in the three- and sixhour treatment groups had free-choice access to a low-quality grass hay. Throughout the study, the team recorded the amount of hay consumed and collected fecal samples from each horse on each Day 7.

The team also measured or estimated pasture plant composition, herbage mass (used to quantify pasture available to an animal), grazing height, and forage preference for each period. Pasture composition consisted of 54.7% crabgrass, 28.3% tall fescue, 8.2% fox tail, 1.14% dallisgrass, 0.86% weeds, and 6.6% bare ground. They noted no difference in digestible energy concentrations (DE) or initial herbage mass for each pasture. However, less pasture was available during periods 2 and 3 compared to 1 and 4.

Key study findings included:

Horses' total daily dry matter (DM) intake (pasture plus hay, if hay was provided) was not affected by length of turnout time. In other words, horses consumed the same amount regardless of the amount of time they were allowed to graze. The team found the highest total daily DM intake which equaled 1.4% of body weight (BW)—in horses on pasture for 24 hours, which is less than the 2-3% BW previous research suggested. Siciliano and colleagues suggested the lower DM intake in their study could be due to high temperatures seen during portions of the research: High temperatures have been shown to decrease forage intake in horses up to 15-20%.

Pasture DM intake, total DM intake, and pasture DM intake rate were higher in periods 1 and 4 compared to 2 and 3, which correlates to the amount of pasture available during those periods.

Pasture DM intake rate increased with restricted grazing. Horses grazing for only 3 hours had a higher intake rate compared to horses grazing for 9 and 24 hours, and horses grazing for 6 hours had a higher consumption rate than horses on pasture for 24 hours. The researchers also learned that horses' fecal pHwhich is both influenced by diet and used as an indicator of hindgut pH—decreased as time on pasture decreased; an acidic environment in the hindgut (termed hindgut acidosis) can lead to colic and other health concerns. This showed the team that length of time on pasture affected hindgut microbial fermentation. The authors believed the increase in rate of pasture intake could have played a role in the lower fecal pH, especially when the horses consumed high-quality pasture. However, they stressed, all fecal pH values were within the range considered to be normal.

Average DE intake was greatest when horses were on pasture for 24 hours, but total DE intake did not differ between treatments. During periods 1 and 4, average and total DE intake was greater than periods 2 and 3. The horses consumed 40%, 66%, 67%, and 94% of their total DE requirements with 3, 6, 9, and 24 hours of pasture access, respectively, which indicates that horses increase their rate of consumption with decreased time on pasture.

The team concluded that their findings support the belief that reduced time on pasture increases consumption rate and decreases fecal pH in horses.

"Simply reducing the time a horse spends at pasture may not always be an effective means of decreasing caloric intake," said Siciliano.

The team noted that more work is needed to develop methods to accurately predict pasture intake of horses grazing for periods less than 24 hours, which could be of great value in preventing or managing obesity in the future.

The study, "Effect of Restricted Pasture Access on Pasture Dry Matter Intake Rate, Dietary Energy Intake, and Fecal pH in Horses," appeared in June in the Journal of Equine Veterinary Science.

Rotational Grazing: Time it Right for Optimal Pastures

By Natalie DeFee Mendik, MA AUG 03, 2012

The nuts and bolts of rotational grazing are simple. The easiest approach is to subdivide your grazing areas with portable electric fencing based on the number of horses you have on your acreage.

You've seen it plenty of times: bare pasture grazed down to the nub. Who wouldn't rather look out of the stable to see happy horses grazing on healthy pastures? One solution lies in rotational grazing, a simple management technique that subdivides pasture areas, which allows forage an opportunity to regrow after it's been grazed. By fencing off part of a pasture, horses can consume grass to a certain height before moving them to another "rested" part of the pasture. The grazed portion then has the opportunity to grow. Rotational grazing does involve more management than allowing your horses' unfettered access to pasture areas, but the payoffs are worth the effort.

"If we set up our plan in such a way that we give forage plants enough time to grow back, we have more forage for the horses to utilize, which can then translate into reduced feed costs," explained Bob Coleman, PhD, PAS, equine extension professor in the University of Kentucky's Department of Animal Sciences. "The biggest benefit is that we are going to extend our grazing season by taking advantage of forage when it's growing and then giving it a chance to come back."

In addition, subdividing large pastures for rotation encourages more even grazing patterns, helping to reduce horses' spot-grazing tendencies in which they choose and ultimately overgraze their favorite, highly palatable forage plants. "You can encourage them to be better consumers of all that's there," noted Coleman. "By moving the horses, you let those highly-selected species come back." Horses also tend to overgraze pasture areas where they like to spend their time; rotating the horses off these areas reduces compaction issues, which also weaken forage plants.

Extension Resources: Don't overlook your county extension office's role in helping you achieve and maintain optimal pastures. From pH testing and fertilization recommendations to dragging and aeration questions, an extension agent is familiar with your area and can help formulate a management plan tailored for your farm's needs.

A weakened pasture results when plants are not given the opportunity to replenish root and plant reserves. "A weak pasture stand is prime for weeds to take over," Coleman remarked. "Grazing so hard you create bare ground is a wonderful opportunity for weeds to take over a pasture. They get sunlight and they don't have any competition, causing weed issues."

The nuts and bolts of rotational grazing are simple. The easiest approach is to subdivide your grazing areas with portable electric fencing based on the number of horses you have on your acreage. You should also plan your watering arrangement--this could involve either portable watering troughs or a permanent watering area around which the paddocks are subdivided. Coleman recommends creating a high-traffic pad around permanent water sources to eliminate mud and turf compaction (see "Creating Hardened Surfaces in High-Traffic Areas").

A pasture is ready for grazing when available forage plants have reached a height of at least six to eight inches. This pasture can be grazed down to about four inches, at which point owners should move horses to another area. The time it takes for horses to graze down to four inches depends on the number of horses and the size of the paddock, but five to seven days is reasonable. Regrowth occurs 21-28 days later for cool season grasses under reasonable growing conditions. Environmental factors play a role as to when or even if you'll move the horses onto a new pasture. For example, in spring when plant growth is active, horses can be rotated onto another section when grass is grazed to about six inches. This shorter grazing cycle will help you keep up with the growing pasture and hopefully reduce the amount of mowing needed to keep the pasture vegetative. On the other hand, when pastures are parched during hot, dry summer months or wet during rainy months, you should move the horses onto a 'sacrifice paddock' to protect pastures. At this point you must supplement the horses' diet with hay.

Just as there's not a set schedule as to when you rotate horses to another paddock, there is also not uniformity among pasture plants. "There will be areas of great selectivity, especially when there are mixed grass varieties," Coleman explained. This means that some plants will be below four inches, while others might be taller. In this case you should move the horses out of that pasture and mow the grass to an even four inches to maintain a vegetative state.

Paying attention to your grazing areas is key to successful rotational grazing. "Horse owners need to be prepared to walk through their pastures. It takes management to make it work," said Coleman. "Watch grazing patterns and pastures. Be observant." Ultimately, pasture becomes healthier and forage becomes more palatable, making the extra effort worthwhile.
